

Rain Gear More Than Just Umbrellas

Remember not too long ago when getting your rain gear meant an umbrella and probably some rubber boots? Well, not any more! Now there are so many kinds of rain gear out there that it's hard to know which to choose from when you head to the closet to go out in the rain. Here are just a few examples of the many new types available these days:

Hunting gear - in every type of camouflage available on the market today, the avid hunter or outdoors person can find rain gear from pants and jackets to ponchos in their favorite camo pattern and style. For hunting, hiking, fishing, or just heading out to work in the yard, this kind of gear can also come in a wide variety of thicknesses and have many other added perks for those who might use it in heavily wooded areas or under harsher conditions than normal people.

Kid gear - for kids ages 0 - 100, you can find it with your favorite cartoon character, logos, colors, flowers, sports, pretty much anything! So, no matter if your little princess needs some pink princess rain gear or your little space invader needs some rainy alien fighting rain gear, you can find it out there today! Most come with hats and matching boots as well, so you're little angel will stay nice and dry, no matter how wet it is.

Adult gear - while the adult version isn't quite as fun as the kid's version, it is still just as useful. It also comes in a wide variety of colors and you can find styles from ponchos to pants and jackets too, it all depends on your preference and how you are going to use it.

Old trusty, the umbrella - of course, don't forget old trusty, your umbrella. These tried and true rain gear reliables are always great to keep in the car, office, or just by the door in case you need one to get to where you're going. So, no matter what other kind of rain gear you have, you should always keep an umbrella somewhere close by.

Basically, there are so many different types and colors of rain gear out there that it is almost impossible to name them all. Just remember that there is always something out there to fit your style, size, and needs, so don't get discouraged if one shop doesn't have just what you are looking for. Keep searching, you'll find that perfect rain gear for you and the entire family.
