

Fosters Home for Imaginary Friends Characters

Blooregard Q. Kazoo - Mac's imaginary friend had to seek shelter at Foster's home of imaginary friends, as Mac's mom thinks her son is too old to have a make-believe friend.

Mac - Bloo and Mac are great friends, and Mac prefers to spend his time at Foster's Home rather than to be bullied around by his older brother.

Wilt - while he is not exactly the "perfect" imaginary friend, Wilt's personality and cheerful nature are almost contagious.

Eduardo - one of the scariest members of Foster's home of imaginary friends, Eduardo may look tough but he is terrified by anything that comes to sight.

Coco - this is one strange bird. Coco doesn't talk, but he makes things interesting by laying colorful eggs that hold all sorts of surprises.

Frankie - she is more of a big sister to the imaginary friends than a house organizer. Frankie is Madame Foster's granddaughter and she is a good friend to everyone.

Duchess - Royal Duchess Diamond Persnickety is one of the most annoying inhabitants of Foster's home of imaginary friends. Her unreasonable demands drive the other imaginary friends crazy.

Terrence - Mac's older brother will stop at nothing to ruin the fun Mac is having with Bloo.

Mr. Herriman - imagined by Madame Foster as a kid, Mr. Herriman is a dignified imaginary rabbit that expects perfection from everyone residing in Foster's home of imaginary friends.

Madame Foster - she is the soul of the home and loves each and every one of the imaginary friends to the maximum. In return, she also receives their unconditioned love. Madame Foster has the presence of a sweet and caring lady.

Emmy Awards

The show has won a total of four Emmy Awards. The episode "House of Bloo's" won two Emmy Awards for art direction (Mike Moon) and character design (Craig McCracken). "World Wide Wabbit" won an Emmy for best storyboard (Ed Baker).

The show's theme song (described by McCracken as "psychedelic ragtime" and written by Venable) was nominated for Best TV Show Theme in 2005, but lost to Danny Elfman's theme to Desperate Housewives.

The episode "Go Goo Go" was nominated for Best Animated Program Under One Hour in 2006, and Character Design supervisor Shannon Tindle won an Emmy that same year for that same episode.
