

Affiliate Marketing With A Pre-Built Review Site

What if you could earn 100% commissions from your own affiliate store, one you don't have to install or set up, one you don't need to know any HTML, PHP or Javascript to run?

And your store will provide the latest reviews of great software, scripts and ebooks. And someone else does those updates for you? And that someone is Joel Comm, one of the most respected names in the internet marketing industry?

And all you have to do is promote a link.

Review sites are incredibly popular - there's nothing like giving your readers the information they're looking for so they can make an informed decision about whether the product they're researching is worth buying.

The downside of a review site is that you have to spend money buying products to review, although further down the line, if your site becomes popular and has kudos, people might submit products to you for review which you'd get to keep for free. But that's some way down the line. If you're just starting your review site, it will take money and time - time to put each product through its paces and time to write and post your reviews.

Doesn't having someone else do that donkey work for you seem like a better idea? It frees up your time for other projects and you don't end up paying wads of cash for products to review. And, let's face it, while a product may have a great sales page, it may be complete dud when you go to use it. So don't such products cost you both time and money (you aren't going to make any affiliate sales from a product you tell people is best avoided)?

Having someone in the industry who knows the good from the bad - kind of like your own personal expert - is a much better proposition. It's why I jumped on this opportunity. My storefront reviews a mixture of products from Clickbank and PayDotCom as well as products that are only exclusively available through PayPal.

This is the perfect way for newbies to get started with affiliate marketing and it's a welcome extra revenue stream for more established marketers.
