

Day Trading Questions Answered

There is so much information available to traders that sometimes I find it overwhelming or even confusing at times. Since the majority of the available and convenient information is in written form, it makes it difficult to ask questions of the author or the website. And if you do, more often than not you never hear back from them, right? And if you do, so much time has passed that you don't even remember asking the question much less why you asked the question in the first place.

Let's say a trader is not sustaining consistent profits, and his question is "What do I do?" For the answer, you can go to the internet via any number of search engines; you can go to the book store and/or library to find out how to establish consistent profits; you might even go to some seminars and courses to find the answer. If you're really on top of things, you might even ask your trading mentor.

It's a pretty broad question, but for as many traders that might be asking this question, there's probably just as many answers. Why? Because there are a number of moving parts that are necessary for sustaining consistent profits, and depending on where you are in your trading development, the answer can be different and vary for each trader. Integral components to the answer may include your trading plan, your trading style, strategies, and more.

The point is, you might "kinda sorta" find an answer to your question, but you may also find out relatively quickly that it is not necessarily customized to your current needs. To add to that, the answer to that question today may very well be an entirely different one if you ask the same question a year from now. The truth is, you need an affordable avenue for asking questions and getting direct, immediate feedback customized to your current needs and situation.

Well, I'm happy to report that there is a solution to this sometimes "path to nowhere" when it comes to answering your trading questions. Trading Everyday has launched a new FREE mini-series of seminars called "Day Trading Questions Answered". It is probably only one of very few seminars available without an agenda because the it is determined by you, the trader. Traders send their questions in advance or they can ask them when they join the seminar. The entire 90 minutes is dedicated to answering only those questions that traders bring to the table. Nothing more, nothing less. How refreshing is that?

So if you've had those nagging trading questions that you can't seem to find the answer to, you might want to consider registering for one of the sessions. Even if you don't have any questions, my bet is that you'll learn from the questions that other traders ask. It's free. You have nothing to lose and everything to gain.

Source: <http://www.articlecircle.com>

About the Author

Leroy Rushing is an active, professional day trader; trading coach; and eBook author. He is the Founder and CEO of Trading Everyday, a distinguished provider of educational trading products and services that are available worldwide.