

Date-Safe Online

Online dating has become increasingly popular over the past ten years. Once thought of as a place where predators went to find innocent pray, it is now a place where many respectable people go to find singles with similar interests. Some online dating sites will want you to pay a monthly fee, whereas many are free. The ones which ask for money will help you narrow your search much more, and help you find people who are highly compatible with you. However, if you don't want to pay for a dating site, there is no need for it. There are many free online dating sites which include, Ok Cupid!, Plenty Of Fish, Date dot com, Dating Pool and countless others.

While online dating has become more mainstream and acceptable, you should still take precautions for your safety. Before meeting someone, you should ask to see a picture of them, and asking to see them on a web camera would be a good idea too. This ensures that they are who they say they are. You should also never give out personal information over the internet, such as a phone number or home address. If you decide to meet someone you met over the internet, arrange to meet at a public place, such as a mall or a park. This ensures that you will be able to call for help, or escape if you end up meeting someone who is not who they claimed to be, or if they turn out to be bad news.

Once you have met you're online dating partner in person and have decided that they are someone you would like to continue seeing, it should be safe to exchange phone numbers just like you would with someone you met at the bar or cooking class. As with any intimate relationship, you should take precautions before consummating your relationship, such as STD blood tests and the use of birth control. Since you don't know any of you're new partners past, this is a vital step. Meeting a new dating partner online is a fantastic way to meet new, like minded people, but just because they told you that they have been tested, you should still ask to see recent papers. Any responsible dater would tell you to do the same. If you're partner refuses to do this, perhaps you should rethink wanted to be with someone who cares so little about their health as well as your own.
