Home security alarm system includes burglar alarm, fire alarm and health safety alarm. Complete all these, and your homes will considerably be safer and your wallet lighter

No one compromises security, that is for sure. But now, danger have gone to such a level that padlocks, chains, fences and even doors and shuttered windows cannot really afford a respite against such a looming threat. On another circumstance, medicine cabinets and emergency assistance numbers are not much help in case of emergency. that is where home security alarm systems come into play.

The first home alarm system is intended for burglars. But with today technology, burglar alarms have come to such heights from the simplistic device of an open/close circuit and a solenoid gong. Today is about high precision and infrared monitoring devices such as cameras. Not only that, these cameras are so small that you can mount them anywhere and still they will evade notice. Conventional burglar alarms are still in play, motion detector and circuit alarms are still found in today homes. The newest innovation is perhaps the alarm that stimulates the barking of a dog. This device also includes macros that would automatically turn on a light to simulate occupancy, a perfect alarm system if you are not at home.

Fire alarms also play an important factor for home security alarm systems. In fact some packages include both a burglar alarm and a fire alarm. In case you do not know, cases of fire are much more common occurrence than forced house entry, so protecting your homes from fires is a non debatable. Fire alarms have a number of types but the most common are smoke detectors. Smoke detectors have two types, ionization and photoelectric. Ionization detectors are cheaper and easier to install so if you cannot afford to get the two types (which is much recommended), then try to get at least the ionization detector.

The next alarm system is for health safety. Sometimes a medicine cabinet loaded with all kinds of prescription drugs will not just do. Accidents happen in such a way that gets you unprepared. Personal alarm system cuts the risk of these situations considerably. By having a personal panic button transmitter in the form of a key fob, this handy emergency button can really get you help as you need it. So no mad dashing to the phone or the bedroom for your medication; a press of the button and the automatic dialer will make a call to the selected phone numbers issuing an emergency situation to your home.

There are also response teams that give out 24/7 monitoring service for a monthly bill. This is the best home security alarm system although it would cost also a considerable sum. The best system works best if one does it for you, e.g. like a personal nurse/bodyguard. And who is the best qualified (except for the personal bodyguard/nurse/butler) than a team of medical personnel watching your routine and making sure you took medicine.

So let me recap. Home security alarm system includes burglar alarm, fire alarm and health safety alarm. Complete all these, and your homes will considerably be safer and your wallet lighter.
